

DASH Spring / Summer 2015

THE SATURATION ISSUE

The world is full. Full of everything. Full of evil, people, houses, emotions, ideas. When the going gets tough, creativity will out. Screaming louder than ever to be heard, DASH Spring / Summer 2015's creative voices scribble, snap and draw in an attempt to combat the mundanity of our 'blasé scroll culture' (Sophie Joy Wright, Thoughts On T-Shirts). Welcome to The Saturation Issue!

Together with photographer David Schulze, stylist Masayo Kishi strives to Get The Glory in their joint NYC-based geisha punk editorial; fashion illustrator Richard Kilroy tells Editor in Chief Noémie Schwaller about the fine line between loose and detail, while a preview of his book Menswear Illustration provides an insight into this vibrant field, along with stunning examples from the likes of Richard Haines, Cédric Rivrain or Tara Doungans. The BBC Sound of 2015 winners Years and Years' frontman Olly Alexander confesses to Hannah Mahony he feels 'so fancy' when ordering sparkling water, and Marlon Rueberg's photo essay Rosana Broadway shows intimate close-ups of the transformation from man to woman in a grand Cambodian theatre setting.

Doing our tagline 'Illustrating Fashion' proud, we upped the illustration ante for Spring/Summer2015 with three exclusive editorials by jewellery designer and illustrator Husam El Odeh and illustrators Anastasia Ruiz and Alessandro Monaco, while recurring DASH collaborator Velwyn Yossy gave our cover a summery overhaul.
